The political world

SARATOGA, July 27.—First Race.—Three-quarters of a mile. Bedobin won; Lucy Walker second, Charley Gorham third. is as far away at least as the depot, and a gentleman's mental horses and carriage must be ordered to reach the one precisely as his real horses and carriage to reach the other Second Race.—One mile and 500 yards.

Colonel Sprague won; Warfield second, Oriole of Washington here. And really it is neither hird. Time—2:20.

Third Race.—One and one-eighth miles.

improved agricultural implements, you understand, and Mr. Lamar is determined to show his neighbors the benefit to be derived those hats. Along with improved machinery we must have also improved cattle. A part of a Senatorial $5000 a year, therefore, which is otherwise spent generously and well, is invested in blooded cattle. Whether these fancies were got from Greystone or Mantua, the result is the same—another proof that bucolic follies go hand in hand with statesmanship. Few men in public life are held in as high esteem at home as Senator Lamar. Here Great Eastern, with running mate Monitor, made two trials to beat 2:14 for a purse of $500. Time—2:23, 2:21. He broke badly in in Oxford he is perhaps more popular than anywhere else. His neighbors have nothing like hero-worship for him, but they esteem him as a gentleman of spotless private life and worthy of public trust. They do regard him as a scholar of unusual attain outlets for the insensible perspiration of the human body. If these become obstructed larity and success. He is no politician, in through neglect of cleanliness or ineffectual the usual sense of the word. He could never members of the next Legislature who are enthusiastically in favor of his return to the Senate. Yet his practical fellow-townsmen laugh freely at his hats and lawn mowers and look upon his agricultural ideas as the foibles of a scholar and statement. For [ateria] foibles of a scholar and statesman, For they observe other foibles-one, they say, they observe other foibles—one, they say, is his absentmindedness. Senator Lamar is under all circumstances polite, polite as the typical old Southern gentleman was. Yet he will sometimes pass his next-door neighbor on the street without speaking. It is an idea prevalent here that he is periodically despondent, and even morose, In these moods he becomes oblivious of all about him. This is of a piece with lawn-mowers hats and improved stock with lawn-mowers, hats and improved stock— so his neighbors regard it, at any rate. Sen-ator Lamar is not rich.
